This module provides an option to explore architecture in archaeological contexts from the prehistoric and classical worlds, through to its reception in the Italian Renaissance. The module will develop the capacity for interdisciplinary and innovative research in the field, based on a more critical understanding of architectural history and an analysis of its legacy in archaeology. As an alternative to hegemony of the architectural object, the syllabus examines the transformative possibilities of construction and the ways in which building operates as a social practice.