London Renaissance Seminar
Contribution Awards 2020

With the aim of recognising the contributions of colleagues to the field of Renaissance / Early Modern Studies the LRS invites nominations for Contribution Awards 2020.

Nominations will close on 28 September 2020. To nominate a candidate please email s.wiseman@bbk.ac.uk with a short description (no more than 200 words) of why you think the nominee fulfils the criteria below and should be given an award. In addition to the small book token prize, the recipients will be invited to participate in a future London Renaissance Seminar activity.

Nominated candidates must be either:
(a) a relatively senior or longstanding academic who has made a significant contribution to the field of Renaissance/Early modern studies.
(b) an early career researcher whose contribution to the field is both evident in their research and promising in other terms.

You may nominate up to two people in each category. Self-nominations are also accepted.

Nominated candidates will have made significant contributions in terms of research. At the same time, we hope to recognise collegiality, creativity, openness to ideas beyond the mainstream, and a recognition of diverse groups engaged with Renaissance studies.

We would expect the contributions recognised to fall within the field of English literature (broadly understood); to deal with material within the stretchable boundaries of about 1520-1690; and to sit alongside other forms of contribution to the field. We are expecting the candidates to have made their contribution within the UK system.
