14	Programme Rationale & Aims	This programme builds on the current collaboration between the departments of History, Classics and Archaeology and Politics at masters level. It meets the rising demand to study the history of the twentieth century alongside international relations. Students are taught by academics across two research-active departments. The course examines the global evolution of international relations, with an emphasis on in-depth historical studies supported by political and sociological analysis.
15	Entry Criteria	For students who have recently taken qualifications with UCAS tariff equivalence, the UCAS tariff score is 104-120 points (A-levels: BCC-BBB). We welcome applicants without traditional entry qualifications as we base decisions on our own assessment of qualifications, knowledge and previous work experience. We may waive formal entry requirements based on judgement of academic potential.
16	Learning Outcomes	Students completing the BA History and International Relations will have: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. acquired knowledge of the history of states and the evolution of international relations 2. developed an understanding of state systems globally, including countries and regions beyond Europe; 3. extended and developed their analytical, evaluative and critical capacities 4. developed transferable skills, including the ability to take responsibility for their own learning, learning how to learn, making oral and written presentations, planning and producing written assignments in accord with basic scholarly standards, working independently and in groups, managing their time effectively and, where they have so chosen, using information technology relevant to their areas of study.

17	Learning, teaching and assessment methods Lecturers provide an overview of issues relevant to the subject being studied. Seminars mix tutor-led instruction with group discussion. They allow students to explore issues in depth and there is an expectation that all students will participate actively by reading recommended texts in advance and offering questions and viewpoints to the group. Where students work in areas related to their course, their experiences enrich discussion. Both lectures and seminars are used to develop subject knowledge and understanding, and to foster key analytical skills. The BA History and International Relations degree has been designed to guide and support students toward the attainment of the skills necessary to independent learning: by the end of their studies, students should be able to read critically, prioritise evidence, and present arguments coherently in written and oral forms. Teaching, learning and assessment modes are regularly reviewed in light of student feedback, student achievement, external examiners' reports, and peer monitoring. Students frequently consult staff outside formal teaching hours, often by email but also in person. Teaching is supported by comprehensive written guidance designed to support independent learning. A detailed coursebook for each module gives contact details of course tutors, describes intended learning outcomes and includes a course outline, schedule, recommendations for weekly reading, and essential information about course organization and assessment. Further materials are distributed in class, and guidelines on dissertations, revision and exam techniques are provided to students during the year. Assessment methods combine a mixture of essays, reports, book reviews, and other written work and unseen written examinations across the taught modules. Essays enable students to read around a particular facet of a subject in depth; examinations provide an opportunity to test students' grasp of a wide range of material within a reasonably short assessment procedure. All students must demonstrate basic proficiency in both examinations and coursework. Provision is made for students with learning difficulties, health issues, or disabilities that may affect their ability to complete coursework and examinations. The Department works closely with the Disability Office to enable all students to participate fully in our courses.
18	Programme Description The programme consists of 360 credits: 10 modules of 30 credits each and 4 modules of 15 credits each; or 8 modules of 30 credits each plus 4 modules of 15 credits each plus Writing the Past: Dissertation (60 credits). Students will take 120 credits at level 4, 120 credits at level 5, and 120 credits at level 6. Compulsory modules: Three are at level 4: The Study of Politics (30 credits), Introduction to International Relations: History and Theory (15 credits) and Structures and Issues in Global Politics (15 credits). Three compulsory modules are at level 5: Exploring the Past (30 credits), International Relations and Foreign Policy, I and International Relations and Foreign Policy, II (15 credits each). At each of these levels, the compulsory modules provide training in relevant study skills and essential disciplinary tools.

At level 6, students must take War and Modern Society, I and War and Modern Society, II (15 credits each). At level 4 study, students also must take two of three modules in History: The Early Modern World, The Modern World, and The Contemporary World. These introduce students to broad time periods, a wide range of geographical areas, and essential themes. They are taught by a mixture of lecture and seminar. The modules are assessed by a combination of exams, essays, book reports, and source analysis. Optional modules: At level 5, students also take an optional module in History and one in Politics. At level 6, students must take a choice of option modules from both disciplines. Among those choices is the dissertation in History and IR, and a choice of History documents-based 'Special Subject' modules. It should be emphasized that for this joint degree, these are available options and are NOT compulsory. There are a large variety of modules on offer within the degree, details of which are available from the department.
