17	Learning, teaching and assessment methods
	The LLM is specifically designed as a generalist postgraduate qualification in law. Accordingly, students will not be required to attend core or compulsory courses. Instead, they will be able to choose up to six modules from the schedule of available modules (including those designated as core and optional modules on our other programmes) offered across the whole of our taught postgraduate provision (with the exception of the LLM QLD (Qualifying Law Degree)): <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • LLM in International Economic Law Justice and Development • LLM/MA in Human Rights • LLM/MA in Criminal Law & Criminal Justice • LLM in Constitutional Law, Politics and Theory In addition, should students wish to intensify their research skills, they may take one of their options as a Research Project (10,000-15,000 words). In such cases students will be appointed a supervisor. In all cases, students will be appointed an academic advisor to

	guide them in their choice of options. In common with its current LLM/MA provision the LLM aims to provide a comprehensive postgraduate education in law, which – at the same time – furnishes a solid qualifying base for further postgraduate study (MPhil/PhD). Students will be taught in small groups in courses founded within the research-led teaching ethos of the School (staff present their latest research). Students are expected to engage fully in such courses, preparing materials and giving presentations/engaging in discussion. Assessment – an essay of 4,000-5,000 words per option – is designed to encourage students to further develop research skills, accessing additional materials in the area of study and summarising their research results in a clear and comprehensive manner. Where the Research Project element is chosen, students will be required to demonstrate independent research skills and high levels of research presentation.
